Abstract of the Presentation

This talk discusses how to choose a topic to work on and how to write up results, including both the form of an article and what we mean by good writing. How to choose a potential outlet for your work and how to deal with journals are also discussed. What is a good journal—the hierarchy of publication outlets in economics—and the difficulties in getting published are considered. The overall goal is to get across the nature of good publishing in economics so that the listener can perform better in the “economics publishing game”.

A Short CV of the Speaker

Daniel Hamermesh earned his A.B. from the University of Chicago (1965) and a Ph.D. from Yale (1969). He taught from 1969-73 at Princeton, from 1973-93 at Michigan State, and has held visiting professorships at universities in the United States, Europe, Australia and Asia. He is a Fellow of the Econometric Society, a research associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research, and was President of the Society of Labor Economists in 2000-01. He authored Labor Demand, The Economics of Work and Pay, and a wide array of articles in labor economics in the leading general and specialized economics journals. His research concentrates on labor demand, time use, social insurance programs (particularly unemployment insurance) and unusual applications of labor economics (to suicide, sleep and beauty). He is widely quoted in the major print media and has appeared on such national television programs as Good Morning, America, and PBS Evening News Hour.
